Mike Bellamy – Reporting critical incidents within the fire departments incident management systems.

It is not commonplace around the state for departments to indicate when incidents are critical. Tallahassee Fire is now tracking that.

Requesting from the Bureau, a summary from departments from around the State that are systematically tracking and reporting critical incidents.

2018, Worker’s Comp Law was amended with the PTSD Bill that provides for benefits/treatment for first responders (who qualify) through certain qualifying incidents (identified by law)

This will not only help safety officers within the departments but will give insight to “clusters” of personnel who have responded to multiple critical incidents and be able to address.

Darrel Donatto – One of the challenges is there is no standard, uniform format for reporting. In south Florida there has been a lot of advocacy for individuals to report on their own through NFORS. There is an app available for your phone where you can track through your own personal database. With the new leadership at NFIRS, hopefully we will see a more uniform (with data fields) way of reporting and unify throughout the country.

Julius Halas – The Joint Council of Fire & Emergency Services, a few years ago, formed a sub-committee for peer support and mental wellness. Teams, through the Health Collaborative and IAFF were sent to the Surfside collapse. Work is ongoing with the committee.

Mike Bellamy – would like to see systematic tracking of critical incidents.
